Rooted in safety. Grown with care.

Founded in 2005, We Love Berries began as a small family-run farm with one core mission: to grow safe, healthy produce that families could trust. The journey started with vegetables, and by 2006, the team expanded into growing strawberries—eventually becoming known for them across the region.

Driven by a passion for food safety and community health, the founders of We Love Berries have always prioritized growing practices that protect both people and the planet. “We’re always thinking about our family, our coworkers, and how to deliver safe, clean produce to the public,” says Lucio, the farm’s founder.

Today, We Love Berries grows strawberries year-round ensuring schools and local communities have consistent access to fresh, flavorful fruit. They remain committed to staying on top of production and quality in every season.
